

Question: Jesus had told Luisa on March 31, 1929 that if Adam had not sinned, Jesus would still have come to earth, but as a reigning King. What would have been the role of our Blessed Mother if this were the case?

Answer: Mary would have been conceived and born without sin, just as she was after Original Sin was committed. She would have been conceived immaculately, and so would all of Adam and Eve's progeny who would have also been conceived without sin in Eden. Eve would have remained the mother of all the living in the order of preternatural grace, and Adam, the head of the human race, would remain under the kingship of the new head of the human race who is Christ. To Luisa Jesus reveals:

"If Adam had not sinned, the Eternal Word who is the very Will of the heavenly Father, would have come to earth glorious, triumphant and reigning, accompanied visibly by his angelic army whom all were to see. And he was to come with the splendor of his glory to enthrall everyone and draw everyone to himself with his beauty, crowned as king with the scepter of command, so as to make himself king and head of mankind. He was to give souls the great honor of being able to say: "We have a king who is man and God". Indeed, your Jesus was to come down from heaven, not to find man infirm on account of having withdrawn himself from My Divine Will, but [in a state] where no illnesses of body or soul should exist" (L. PICCARRETA, XXV, March 31, 1929).

"If Adam had passed the test, all human generations would have been confirmed in his state of happiness and royalty" (L. PICCARRETA, XXIV, April 1, 1928).

From the angle of speculative theology, it is possible that after Adam and Eve had "filled the earth" with little Adams and Eves as God had commanded them to do, the humanity of Christ, who would have descended to earth as a "triumphant and reigning king", would have been formed in the womb of the Blessed Virgin Mary. It is possible that had there been no Original Sin, the Virgin Mary would have been destined by God to be the last human being to be born of the loins of Adam and Eve, through whom Christ would have assumed a human nature in Eden.
